EXHIBIT “A”

Update on LifeSavers

Summary of LifeSavers Postulates

- Structure of family units
  - Families have a “hub”
  - “Hubs” have “spokes”
  - Service providers are “spokes” which are often a source of frustration
- LifeSavers is about dual access with boundaries
  - Work-life balance includes setting priorities and boundaries and having the discipline and tools to maintain them
  - LifeSavers is NOT about merging business and personal
  - LifeSavers is about BOUNDARIES between business and personal
  - Dual-access with boundaries

Summary of LifeSavers Postulates (Cont.)

■ Notification

- One needs to be notified of 911's
- One should be able to discriminate between a personal 911 and business 911 (no work emergency is more important than a seriously injured or sick family member)
- Verbal contact not required or desired
  - It's about the person with whom one is communicating and the nature of the communication
  - It's about communications where verbal contact is not possible, required and/or desired
- LifeSavers is not a single product – it's a feature set implemented across a family of products
  - e.g., product meeting the needs of the working "hub" vs/ product meeting the need of a teenage "spoke"
  - Theorized 1st adopters – working "hubs"

“Hub” of the Family

- The LifeSavers team postulated that:
  - Most families have a “hub” - one person who is predominantly balancing family logistics & scheduling
  - Pied Piper referred to this individual as the “keeper of the calendar”
  - Working hubs are “homing from work”
- The LifeSavers team is suggesting Compaq capitalize on this phenomenon - to expand current work-centric (or home-centric) product lines to be “life-centric” - offering functionality that not only meets business needs, but allows “hubs” to easily and efficiently “home from work”

Three Tiers of "Spokes"

This image is a vertical strip of a film negative. It features a dark, grainy background with a prominent, bright, rectangular light source located near the top edge. The light source appears to be a window or a brightly lit area, with some internal detail visible despite the high contrast. The overall texture is noisy and characteristic of film grain.
